2010–2011 REPORT TO THE COMMUNITY and 2012 CALENDAR

Celebrating the past...
Empowering the present...
Preparing for the future

50 Years
Central Carolina Community College
Welcome to Central Carolina Community College’s 2012 Calendar/2011-11 Annual Report. We hope you enjoy the photographs and stories that tell of the exciting growth, accomplishments, and activities at your community college.

2012 continues our 50th anniversary year, which we are celebrating from July 2011 through June 2012. For 50 years, the college has grown and established its vision as “the leading force for educational opportunities, economic progress, and cultural enrichment in the communities it serves.”

You will see some of the ways the vision is realized in this report.

The college now enrolls many thousands of students each year in university transfer, vocational and technical, continuing education, basic skills, lifelong learning, business ownership, and industry workforce training programs.

We have led the state – and sometimes the nation – in developing and offering leading-edge educational programs. We have become a major cultural resource, as seen in our highly-acclaimed theater productions and our Confucius Classroom, which brings international cultural events to our area and helps prepare students for the global economy.

As you will see inside, CCCC has been named among the top 50 community colleges in the nation. The U.S. Department of Energy’s Office of Scientific and Technical Information honored the college in 2011 by describing it as “a strong force for educational opportunities, economic progress and cultural enrichment in the communities it serves.”

None of this would have been possible without the support of many people over our entire history. We thank all those who dreamed so big, led so ably, and worked so hard to build and support the college, its programs, and students.

We thank all those who do so now. Without your help, we cannot succeed; with your help, we cannot fail. Because of you, the future is bright with opportunity for so many.

Thank you,

T. Eston Marchant, Ed.D.
Central Carolina Community College is among the top 50 community colleges in the nation, according to rankings done by Washington Monthly magazine.

Washington Monthly based its rankings on student surveys done by the Center for Community College Student Engagement at the University of Texas as well as graduation rates published by the U.S. Department of Education.

The Center’s 2010 CCSSE Report included survey results from about 440,000 students at 663 colleges. At CCCC, 775 students in 84 different classes responded to the survey. The CCSSE surveyed students on their community college experiences in five categories: Active & Collaborative Learning, Student Effort, Academic Challenge, Student-Faculty Interaction, and Support for Learning.

Based on the responses of CCCC students to their educational experiences in those categories and an above-average graduation rate, Washington Monthly ranked the college in the top 50 of all the colleges taking part in the CCSSE.

The article pointed out that community colleges have open – rather than selective – admissions policies, receive less funding than four-year colleges, and include populations who have greater educational and financial hurdles to overcome in getting a college education.

It noted that, at the top 50 community colleges, including CCCC, institutional leadership, high expectations, quality interaction between instructors and students, and providing students with academic support empowered them to achieve in spite of previous low educational levels or lack of financial resources.

President Bud Marchant credited the college’s success and the recognition of it to its proactive student-centered culture.

“We want students to know that when they enroll at Central Carolina, they are stepping into a community dedicated to their success,” he said.

- January 23: Chinese New Year
The beauty, grace, and excitement of spring danced across the stage of the Dennis A. Wicker Civic Center as the Xiamen University Students Art Troupe shared traditional Chinese dance and music.

The Spring Festival Gala, performed by students and instructors of the Art College of Xiamen University, People's Republic of China, also celebrated the start of the Chinese New Year, the Year of the Rabbit, which started in February.

The group delighted the audience with dance, music, and a tai chi demonstration from some of China’s 55 ethnic minorities. The numbers ranged from hauntingly graceful to energetic with evocative titles such as “Blooming Flowers and Full Moon.” The performance of some American tunes, such as “Jingle Bells,” added to the fun. The musicians played traditional Chinese instruments: lute, zither, cucurbit flute, bamboo flute, dulcimer, and urheen, a two-stringed violin.

The Xiamen University performance was the fourth in a series of Chinese cultural events brought to the area by Central Carolina Community College’s Confucius Classroom, in partnership with North Carolina State University’s Confucius Institute. The Classroom was established in 2009 to help strengthen cultural and economic ties and understanding between China and the area of central North Carolina that the college serves.

At the end of the performance, the Xiamen University Art College delegation presented a calligraphic painting to Central Carolina Community College President Bud Marchant and welcomed the friendship that has been established between the two institutions.

“The lyrics to the last song this wonderful group sang included the words, ‘we will never forget this evening,’” said CCCC President Bud Marchant. “We at the college and all those who saw this performance never will. We are glad that our Confucius Classroom was able to bring this tremendously talented group to the public in our area.”
University transfer degree student Lauren Busche, of Fuquay Varina, spoke for all the students at the CCCC Foundation’s 2010 Scholarship Luncheon, expressing gratitude for her scholarship.

“My family could not support my dreams of a college education,” Busche said quietly. “I’d seen my mother sign up for college classes, but have to drop them because of the cost. In summer 2008, I registered at CCCC and applied for a scholarship.”

Busche received the Harnett Students Scholarship in both 2008 and 2009 and her dream of college became a reality.

Thomas Smith, of Moncure, was a forklift operator until he broke his leg and ended up in a wheelchair for nine months. He couldn’t return to his former position, so he decided to come to CCCC to retrain for another career.

“I received the Cymbria and Raymond H. Amberger Scholarship to help me pay for my education,” he said. “It has meant a lot that somebody out there cares. I really appreciate it.”

College President Bud Marchant welcomed the donors and recipients to the luncheon.

“This luncheon, along with graduation, is one of the most festive and joyous occasions we have at the college,” he said. “We thank all of our donors for helping our students achieve their dream of a college education.”

Ralph Upton, Foundation vice president for Resource Development, told the gathering that there has not been a time since the founding of the college when the need for people to train and retrain for jobs has been greater. Eighty-five percent of the college’s students and graduates live and work in the college’s service area of Chatham, Harnett and Lee counties. When scholarship donors invest in the students, they invest in their communities.

Find out how you can make a difference in the lives of our students by contacting the CCCC Foundation at (919) 718-7231 or dglover@cccc.edu.

What do you get when you combine an unfinished, dusty old room in a textile mill with Shakespeare, 1920s songs, and 35 people willing to put in hundreds of hours of work? – An original musical comedy so immediately popular that folks from inside and outside the community find themselves clambering to find tickets for sold-out shows!

Such was the case for “Dreamland, A Musical,” an adaptation of Shakespeare’s “A Midsummer Night’s Dream,” by local playwright Drew Lasater. The show was performed at Chatham Mills by Central Carolina Community College students and Chatham community actors under the direction of Ellen Bland, CCCC drama and communications instructor.

Lasater adapted “A Midsummer Night’s Dream” by setting it in the 1920s jazz age and incorporating songs from the early part of the 20th century that fit moments in the show or characters and singers. Music director Creighton Irons arranged the songs to allow the “fairy realm” of the script to incorporate rock and punk sounds, while keeping the “mortal” songs true to their roots.

Most of the performers were enrolled in Bland’s play production class. Almost anywhere you find college theater students performing a show, they are doing so as part of a theater department, in a bona fide theater, with a technical staff to provide lighting, sound, costumes, set, and box office. Not so with Bland’s students. They, along with guest actors, musicians, artists, and technicians from Chatham County and neighboring communities, provide quality theater in an unorthodox space where they have built their own stage and audience seating.

Audiences loved the show and, largely through social media, it quickly built a reputation as “top notch,” and “engaging every minute.” Despite folding chair seating and some peering around steel girders and poles to see the stage, audiences concluded each show with standing ovations and kudos to performers, as well as to the sound and lighting technicians who overcame great challenges to make the production work.

The largest spring curriculum graduating class in the history of Central Carolina Community College celebrated its achievements during two graduation exercises on May 17, 2011.

Family members and friends, approximately 1,300 at each of the exercises, filled the Dennis A. Wicker Civic Center to applaud and cheer their graduates who had worked so hard for this day.

All received their credentials from CCCC President Dr. Bud Marchant and CCCC Board of Trustees Chairman Ed Garrison in the morning exercises and Dr. Marchant and trustee Frances Warner in the afternoon exercises.

During the graduation, Marchant recognized Warner for her 12 years of service on the board, helping to make the college the great institution it has become.

The graduating students earned almost 1,000 credentials, with some earning more than one: 270 Associate in Applied Science degrees, 82 Associate in Arts degrees, 10 Associate in Science degrees, 158 diplomas, and 445 certificates.

Graduation speaker Michael Manuel, of Chatham County, told the graduating class that the knowledge and relationships they formed at the school would last a lifetime. He had returned to school in 2009 after the job he had for 16 years disappeared in the recession. He earned A.A.S. degrees in Industrial Systems and Industrial Systems Bio-maintenance and was the first Industrial Systems Technology graduate to speak at a commencement.

“Thanks to CCCC for continuing to create educational opportunities and change lives,” he said.

Dr. Marchant described graduation as “the happiest day of the year.”

“We have truly affected these graduates’ lives for good, especially those who came back to learn new job skills,” he said. “Many already have jobs, and many have interviews lined up. CCCC has helped them transition from a bad situation into a good situation.”

Lora Bradley, of Chatham County, gets a congratulatory hug from her grandson and daughters following spring graduation. Bradley received her A.A.S. in Human Services Technology.

Joan Haverson drove 200 miles to take part in the college’s Certified Barbeque Judging class at the Harnett County Campus. She said the trip from Charlottesville, Va., was worth it. “The class was well done, lively, interesting – and delicious,” she said with a smile.

Haverson and more than 50 others from North and South Carolina, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Georgia, and Florida gathered to learn how to judge barbeque and become Kansas City Barbeque Society-certified competition judges. Class members included competition barbeque and backyard cooks, as well as people who just love to eat barbeque.

Don Harwell, KCBS vice president and class instructor, shared his expertise on judging barbeque. Class participants learned about the types of meats used in a competition, how they are cooked and presented for judging, the rules cooks and judges must follow, and how to judge the meat by KCBS standards.

Then came the delicious part – tasting samples of barbequed chicken, pork, ribs, and brisket and judging them by KCBS standards, based on appearance, taste and tenderness.

Scott Holder, of Dunn, received his class enrollment as an early Father’s Day present from his wife. He enjoyed it so much, he’s already hoping the college will offer another barbeque judging class.

At the conclusion of the class, each participant raised an arm to the square and recited the KCBS Official Oath for Judge Certification:

“I do solemnly swear to objectively and subjectively evaluate each barbeque meat that is presented to my eyes, my nose, my hands, and my palate. I accept my duty to be an Official KCBS Certified Judge, so that truth, justice, excellence in barbeque, and the American way of life, may be strengthened and preserved forever.”

Then, still savoring the taste, smell, and texture of barbeque, the class dispersed, many looking forward to actually judging competitions.

“The class was a big success,” said Len Royals, Continuing Education director in Harnett County. “More people signed up than we anticipated. We were firing up the grills at 6 a.m. to cook all the meat, but it was worth it. We will definitely offer this class again.”

Visionary leaders in the late 1950s wanted post-secondary vocational education for the people of their community. Out of that vision, through hard work, dedication, and commitment of resources, was born Lee County Industrial Education Center, the forerunner of Central Carolina Community College.

The Center offered its first extension class, Job Instructor Training, in the summer of 1961. The first building was completed in 1962 on what became the Lee County Campus. The first curriculum class, Practical Nurse Education, started in spring 1963.

The college has grown exponentially from that small beginning. It expanded into Chatham County in 1964 and Harnett County in 1965. It now enrolls many thousands of students each year in university transfer, vocational and technical, continuing education, career and college readiness, lifelong learning, business ownership, and industry workforce training programs. It is also home to Lee Early College, where students can earn both a high school diploma and an associate degree.

“Along the way, we have led the state – and sometimes the nation – in developing and offering leading-edge programs, from sustainable agriculture to laser and photonics technology,” said CCCC President Dr. Bud Marchant. “We have also become a major cultural resource for our area.”

CCCC has always been an integral part of the communities it serves. For the 50th Anniversary Kickoff on July 23, 2011, at the college’s Emergency Services Training Center, approximately 2,000 people showed up to celebrate. Many, if not most, had ties to the college because they or a relative or friend had taken classes, attended events sponsored by the college, been served by college graduates who make up a significant part of the area workforce, or donated to the college through the CCCC Foundation.

For fifty years, Central Carolina Community College has educated and enriched the area it serves and the lives of the individuals in it – and beyond. The abundant educational flowering of the college’s present time has grown from the deep roots of its past. From these will blossom the fruit of the future, nourishing, sustaining, and enriching our communities.
The community can be proud of the first five-year group of Lee Early College graduates for taking the road less traveled, said LEC Principal Robert Biehl at the school’s May 16, 2011 graduation.

An early college program hadn’t been attempted in Lee County before LEC opened in 2006 as a partnership between Central Carolina Community College and Lee County Schools. More than 250 students are now enrolled at the school, which is located at CCCC’s Lee County Campus. LEC offers students the opportunity to earn a high school diploma and an associate degree or college transfer credits in four to five years. Twelve students graduated from the program early.

The 39 members of the Class of 2011 were met with enthusiastic cheers and applause as they ascended the stage at the Dennis A. Wicker Civic Center to receive their diplomas. Most also received an Associate in Arts degree at Central Carolina Community College’s graduation the next day.

Dr. Lisa Chapman, CCCC’s Vice President of Academic Affairs, served as the LEC commencement speaker. She said the students helped shape what the program has become and congratulated them on their numerous awards and scholarships and their dedication to student organizations.

“I know you’ll make us proud whatever your next adventure might be,” she told the graduates.

In his speech to his fellow graduates, Shakeel Harris shared his memories of his interview when he first applied to Lee Early College. He said he promised then to bring a sense of pride and excellence to the school, and he hoped he had fulfilled that promise.

“You all have taught me how to embrace change while striving to make a difference,” Harris said. “We are truly pioneers and legends of the Lee Early College community. Our potential is limitless.”

Most of the Lee Early College graduates have gone on to four-year institutions. Some are continuing their studies at CCCC, while others have joined the military or entered the work force.
The Central Carolina Community College Foundation had its largest Furniture Auction in the event’s 11-year history in 2011. With a strong show of support from the community, the auction raised more than $25,000. The proceeds were used by the Foundation to fund an endowment that provides scholarships for CCCC Harnett County students.

“We are very grateful for the support our community has shown towards this annual event,” said Diane Glover, Foundation executive director. “With their support, we are enabling these students to receive an outstanding education at CCCC and helping them to achieve their educational and career goals.”

At the auction, bidders vied for more than 100 pieces of handcrafted, quality indoor and outdoor furniture, metalwork, home décor, yard decorations, outdoor storage facilities, and more. The auction items were created by student inmates in the college’s carpentry and welding classes at Harnett Correctional Institution.

“There is a lot of joy in helping young people afford an education,” said Edward Taylor, the college’s carpentry instructor at HCI. “The inmates also benefit. They are trained in marketable skills so they can return to society as contributing members. The annual auction provides an opportunity for them to give back to society even while completing their sentences.”

“The 2011 auction was one of the best we have ever had,” said Bill Tyson, CCCC Harnett Provost. “The HCI students truly demonstrated how much they have learned through the carpentry and welding programs by producing some outstanding pieces. The community responded well and together we make a difference in the lives of our college’s students in Harnett County.”

The CCCC Foundation is a 501(c)(3) charitable organization affiliated with, but independent of, the college. It receives gifts, such as cash or equipment, made on behalf of CCCC and uses them to advance the mission of the college.

Turn on your television and enjoy the newest channel in the area: Central Carolina Community College’s 4CNC.

Programming created by the college’s Broadcast Production Technology video production students streams to viewers in Lee and parts of Chatham and Harnett counties via Charter Communications cable network.

Programming on the channel includes college events, speakers, presentations, programs, people, and how-to shows. It also carries Lee County government meetings, public events, and community announcements.

4CNC can be seen on Charter channel 105 for digital signal or channel 129 for cable box feed. It can also be seen at the college’s web site, www.cccc.edu.

The channel represents a partnership between the college, Lee County, and Charter. Partnerships with Chatham and Harnett counties are underway to broadcast to areas serviced through Time Warner Cable.

Expansion of 4CNC will give the college the largest service area of any community college channel in the state. Only a few other colleges in the North Carolina Community College System offer students real-life experience in television programming production.

“We see a lot of benefits from this partnership,” said Lee County Manager John Crumpton. “We’re excited about working with the students to develop programs about the county and get them out to the community. It will also be a great tool for marketing the county. The college students will get hands-on training and the college will also be able to get its information out.”

The college added a new class, Television Performance II, to its broadcasting curriculum to help handle the production demands of creating programming.

This is very exciting,” said Kassandra Lyles, CCCC television instructor. “Running and creating programming for the channels takes the theory the students learn from textbooks and puts it into practice. The students are highly motivated because they will be creating programming for an audience.”
Western Chatham County took an educational leap forward with the completion of Central Carolina Community College’s Siler City Center in 2010 in the Central Carolina Business Campus industrial park. It is the first facility built in the western part of the county specifically for the college’s educational programs.

The two-story, 23,800 square-foot Siler City Center is located on a 41-acre wooded site. It is one of only a handful of North Carolina community college centers in an industrial park. The location offers the advantage of workforce training for companies that decide to move into the industrial park.

The new facility enables the college to expand workforce training, basic skills, adult education, curriculum programs, and enrichment classes in western Chatham County in a major way.

The college has offered adult education classes in Siler City since 1965. From 1984 to 2010, it used the former Henry B. Siler School. The programs outgrew the space and the facility was found to need major renovations, so the Chatham County Board of Commissioners approved construction of the new Center. Designed by Hobbs Architects and built by Monteith Construction Corp., it was completed in October 2010.

The Center is energy efficient, with sustainable features such as the solar oriented site design, minimal site and habitat disturbance, low-flow water systems, use of recycled materials, natural daylighting of interior spaces, and reflective roof materials. The U.S. Green Building Council awarded the Center its Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED) Gold Level certification.

The Center cost approximately $4.2 million to build, with another $1.4 million for equipment, design and engineering, and contingency. It houses classrooms, offices, a student center, computer and class labs, vocational/industrial training shops, a bookstore, and other services.

“[This new facility] is a realization of dreams, provides new opportunities and celebrates the future of Central Carolina Community College, Siler City and the local workforce,” said Sara Lambert, Siler City Center site coordinator. “We are here to serve and grow with the community.”

Central Carolina Community College launched its long-awaited Firefighter Academy in 2011 and graduated its first 18 cadets.

“The establishment of this program and the first graduating class makes me feel wonderful,” said Joey Shue, the college’s Fire and Rescue coordinator. “Having this academy here is good for the fire departments, good for the communities they serve, good for the students, and good for the college because we are meeting the needs of our communities.”

Development of the Continuing Education program had been a goal of the college since the mid-1990s. Since his retirement as captain of the Sanford Fire Department in 1997, Shue has overseen the college’s firefighter training. He and Wilbert “Tramp” Dunn, retired captain of the Raleigh Fire Department, serve as the Firefighter Academy’s coordinators.

To graduate, cadets have to pass 21 separate classes that new hires at fire departments would have to take individually, as well as earn certifications in emergency medical rescue, vehicle machine rescue, and hazardous materials response. The course runs eight hours per day, five days per week for six months.

“The cadets are introduced to a massive amount of education and have to master a great many skills,” said Landis Phillips, director of the college’s Emergency Services Training Center, where the Academy is taught. “They are basically full-time students, or really, more than full-time students because they carry a heavy load – a total of 833 hours altogether – and many of them have part-time jobs.”

Phillips said that, while the academy isn’t necessary to become a firefighter, it puts candidates far ahead of the competition.

“Cadets come out of the academy way ahead of the game,” he said. “All of the things they learn are things they’d have to learn one piece at a time, so having all of the certifications puts them that far ahead.”

A named endowment may be established at Central Carolina Community College with a minimum of $10,000.00. The initial funds, along with any additional gifts made throughout the years, remain permanently in the corpus of the endowment. An endowment becomes a perpetual source of funding for whatever the donor wishes to achieve for the good of the college and community. Scholarships, program needs, and other specified awards are made from the accrued earnings and in accordance with any guidelines set forth by the endowment. If you are interested in learning more about naming opportunities, please contact the CCCC Foundation at (919) 718-7231.

With your help – We did it!

We extend special thanks to The Pantry/Kangaroo Express, Inc. for being the lead sponsor of the 21st Annual CCCC Foundation Golf Classic! With the support of our event sponsors, players, volunteers, and the Quail Ridge Golf Course, the 2010 Golf Classic was a success! Through the help of our friends, we were able to raise $40,000 for our Awards and Scholarship Programs.

Your support is greatly appreciated!

Foundation Statement of Financials

The community continued to show their support for Central Carolina Community College by contributing $365,000 in private gifts during the 2010-2011 fiscal year. These gifts included long term commitments made to the college through the establishment of four named endowments and the naming of the Louise L. Tuller Associate Degree Nursing program of study. In-kind gifts of equipment, supplies, pro bono, and other services totaling $14,000 were also donated to the college.

During the 2010 – 2011 fiscal year the CCCC Foundation provided $225,000 in direct support to the college and the students it serves.

For more information about how you can make a difference in your community, contact the CCCC Foundation at (800) 682-8353, ext. 7231 or via email at foundation@cccc.edu or visit www.cccc.edu/foundation.

CCCC Foundation Board of Directors

The Central Carolina Community College Foundation Board of Directors is composed of residents of Chatham, Harnett, and Lee counties who are excited about serving their communities, the college, and its students. They raise funds for special needs and projects of the college that are not provided through state appropriations and promote the educational goals of its students through scholarships. Members and officers of the 2011-2012 board are: (first row, from left) Perry Harrison, of Pittsboro; Tom Joyner, Secretary Lowell Rickard, Jimmy Keen, Mikeal Basinger, Vice President of Activities Phil Bradley, Brian Davis, and Treasurer Genease Fields, all of Sanford; and Welford Harris, of Pittsboro; and (second row, from left) Patrick Barnes, of Apex; Bobby Powell and Mike Hendley, both of Sanford; Carroll Marsalis and Past President George Womble, both of Lillington; Travis Bailey, of Angier; Mark Eason, of Lillington; Joe Trageser, of Pittsboro; and Vice President of Internal Relations Del Jones, of Sanford; and (third row, from left) Chatham At-Large Barber Holmes, of Pittsboro; Foundation President Bill Milholen, of Siler City; Lou Byrd, of Pittsboro; Margaret de St. Aubin, of Siler City; Charlie Welborn, of Sanford; Harnett At-Large Jim Randolph, of Cameron; George Lucier, of Pittsboro; and Dargan Moore, John Dixon, CCCC trustee Ed Garrison, and CCCC President Bud Marchant, all of Sanford. Not pictured are directors John Beck, David Caplan, Vice President of Community Relations Rob Patterson, and CCCC Board of Trustees Chairman Julian Philpott, all of Sanford; Catherine Evans, of Lillington; and James Holt, of Pittsboro. The CCCC Foundation is a 501(c)(3) charitable organization affiliated with, but independent of, the college.
An equal opportunity college, Central Carolina Community College serves the public without regard to race, sex, color, creed, age, disability, religion, or national origin.
