President’s Message

We thank all those who dreamed so big, led so ably, and worked so hard to build and support the college, its programs, and students.

To the friends of Central Carolina Community College,
Welcome to Central Carolina Community College’s 2013 Calendar and its Annual Report for the 2011-12 school year.

As you turn the pages, you will see an exciting sampling of the many accomplishments, activities, and events that made up our year – and the people who were part of them.

We celebrated our 50th Anniversary during 2011-12 and the year lingers in pictures, words, and memories of events at our campuses in Chatham, Harnett, and Lee counties.

Since it offered its first classes in 1961, the college has provided workforce training, preparation for university courses, and enrichment classes. Our alumni have gone on to contribute their skills, strengths, and vision to the betterment of their families, communities, state, and nation.

The college was honored with several prestigious awards during its 50th Anniversary year. CNN Money ranked CCCC 65th in the nation for helping its students succeed. The Association for the Advancement of Sustainability in Higher Education awarded CCCC a STARS Silver ranking for its achievements in sustainability. The North Carolina Community College System recognized the college for “Exceptional Institutional Performance” in its Critical Success Factors Report.

As part of its 50th celebration, the college awarded its first Distinguished Alumni Awards to Rachel Burton, Research Director for Piedmont Biofuels; Lee County Sheriff Tracy Carter; and Dr. Anthony Harrington, CCCC Lead History Instructor. Each richly deserved the honor and typifies the quality and dedication found among the college’s graduates.

Awards, distinguished alumni, our new Youth Apprenticeship in Welding partnership with Caterpillar-Sanford and Lee County Schools, our new Health Sciences Building in Lillington that will open in 2013 – these and more can be read about in this Annual Report.

2011-2012 was an excellent and eventful year for your community college. Now, the future awaits. Join us!

President T. Eston “Bud” Marchant, Ed.D.

Board of Trustees

Central Carolina Community College’s Board of Trustees is composed of community members from the college’s service area of Chatham, Harnett and Lee counties. Its responsibility is to govern the college by setting policy and selecting the college’s president. Dr. T.E. “Bud” Marchant is the college’s chief administrative officer.

Central Carolina Community College is officially exceptional – based on the North Carolina Community College System’s 2012 Critical Success Factors Report. CCCC was one of just 16 out of the system’s 58 colleges to earn an “Exceptional Institution Performance” recognition.

To achieve EIP, a college had to:
1. Meet or exceed all seven performance measures established by the NCCCS,
2. Have graduating students earn at least a 70 percent passing rate on all licensure exams for first-time test takers and,
3. Have students who transferred from the college into the University of North Carolina System perform at a level equal to or above native UNC System students.

CCCC excelled in all three categories: It exceeded all the performance measures, achieved an 84 percent passing rate on licensure exams, and had 94 percent of its transfer students perform better than students who started at UNC.

“I have always liked the word ‘exceptional’,” said CCCC president, Dr. Bud Marchant. “It has a very nice ring to it. This year, we not only met all of the standards, we substantially exceeded them. To be designated as one of the very few colleges in the state as an exceptionally performing institution is a testament to our outstanding faculty and staff, who are totally dedicated to the success of our students.”

The annual Critical Success Factors Report is the NCCCS’s major accountability document for tracking the performance of the state’s community colleges, as mandated by the General Assembly.

“The results of this year’s Critical Success Factors report shows the increased emphasis our community colleges are placing on ensuring our students are well prepared for the workplace or for additional educational opportunities,” said NCCCS President Scott Ralls. “I congratulate our colleges as they strive to meet the continually changing needs of their citizens and communities while keeping a strong focus on the success of their students.”
Success tastes very sweet – just ask members of the January 2012 CCCC Adult High School and GED graduating class.

“I’m from a low-income family,” said Kiante Fox, of Lee County. “My family said it would be very hard for me to go to college. Well, I got my GED and I plan to get my associate degree and then go on and earn a bachelor’s.”

Applause greeted Fox’s comments during the commencement in the Dennis A. Wicker Civic Center. Most of the graduates had overcome challenges to achieve their goal of earning a diploma and, like Fox, most planned to continue their education.

“You have made a great start on a great future,” CCCC President Bud Marchant told the graduates. “There’s no reason to stop now.”

He urged them to continue their education at the college. The CCCC Foundation provided each of the graduates with a voucher for a three-credit college course and many planned to take advantage of that.

Student speaker Anna Elizabeth Umberger, of Chatham County, had been home-schooled, but never got her diploma.

Instead, she went on a five-year mission trip to Honduras.

“When I got back, I knew I needed to get my GED and get on with my education, but I didn't feel confident,” she said. “The instructors at CCCC made me feel that I could do it. Go after your dream and don’t let fear stop you. Never, ever let fear control your life.”

Many family members were on hand to celebrate with their graduates. Margery Eastman, of Harnett County, had her four children, eight grandchildren, and sister cheering her for earning her GED.

“I always wanted to do it and I finally did it,” she said, “I want my grandchildren to know that anything is possible if you set your mind to it.”

Central Carolina Community College and Harnett County broke ground in 2012 for the college's Health Sciences Building at the Brightwater Science and Technology Campus, in Lillington.

The state-of-the-art 50,250-square-foot building is scheduled for completion by fall 2013, but it is already an important partner in the Highway 421 medical corridor.

That corridor will include the college's building, Harnett Health Systems 50-bed Central Campus Hospital – also in Brightwater, First Choice Community Health Center, Campbell University's School of Osteopathic Medicine, and other facilities and medical-related businesses.

It is anticipated that the facilities will create about 1,500 jobs over the next three years and attract 40-50 physicians and physician assistants to the area. All this will result in a projected $1 billion in economic development over the next 10 years.

According to the U.S. Bureau of the Census, the Dunn micropolitan area, which includes all of Harnett County, had the largest increase in population of any micropolitan area in the nation between April 1, 2010, and July 1, 2011. It gained 4,578 residents, bringing the total to 119,256. Harnett is growing fast, but it is still a rural county.

Studies show that residents of rural areas tend to have less access to health care than those in urban areas, so the Health Sciences Building groundbreaking and the coordination that has taken place are very important.

“My hope is that years from now we’ll look back at this day as one of the most important in improving the quality of life in Harnett County,” said Julian Philpott, chair of the CCCC Board of Trustees. “We all have dreams for a better life. Today, we are participating to have our individual dreams become a collective reality.”
CCCC celebrates 50th at Chatham Campus

The Rabbit Run 5K got CCCC’s 50th Anniversary celebration at its Chatham County Campus off to a fast start.

An overcast day and chilly breeze couldn’t dampen the enthusiasm or enjoyment at Central Carolina Community College’s 50th Anniversary Celebration at its Chatham County Campus.

Fifty years ago, in 1961, the college, then called the Lee County Industrial Education Center, offered its first classes in Sanford. It expanded into Chatham County in 1964 and has become the major provider of post-secondary education in the county.

“I recognized the importance of what the college was offering from the time I moved here,” said George Lucier, a Chatham resident for 44 years and a college trustee since 2009.

More than 90 runners turned out for the CCCC Foundation’s Rabbit Run 5K, one of the highlights of the event. Some were experienced; others ran for the fun of it or to show support for the college. A tethered balloon ride attracted both children and adults. The mild breeze added to the excitement as the huge balloon rose to about 40 feet in the air. It was worth the wait.

Visitors also got up-close with the campus’s green programs and buildings, seeing a culinary arts demonstration and the Student Farm, and touring the college’s Sustainable Technology Center and the Chatham Community Library. Free health screenings and a registry drive for potential bone marrow donors were provided in the Student Center.

The celebration was a big “thank-you” to the Chatham community for its enthusiastic support of the college, said CCCC President Bud Marchant.

“We wouldn’t have become what we are without the strong advocates for and supporters of the college for all these years,” he said. “I thank everyone who was or is involved, as well as the students who trusted us to give them an excellent education both for the workforce and for further education.”
Excitement filled the Dennis A. Wicker Civic Center on May 11, 2012, as Central Carolina Community College celebrated its 50th Anniversary year spring commencement.

The celebration filled the main hall of the facility twice over as morning and afternoon sessions were held to accommodate the graduating class and all their family and friends.

"Truly, truly, this is the most joyful day in the academic calendar," CCCC President Bud Marchant told the gathering.

At the graduation, former CCCC trustee Frances Frye Roberts Warner received the first Honorary Associate in Arts presented by the college. Warner was honored for both her service as a trustee from 1999 to 2011 and her outstanding service to the community.

The Class of 2012 included the college's first six Carolina Student Transfer Excellence Program (C-STEP) graduates. C-STEP is a UNC-Chapel Hill program that partners with seven community colleges, including CCCC. Selected talented low- and moderate-income students are assured admission to the university if they complete the program.

Commencement speaker Ellen Bland, Humanities instructor and CCCC Instructor of the Year, delivered the commencement address, cautioning the graduates not to let connectivity technology take the place of human connectivity. Student speakers Karen Diaz, Tarrel "T.J." Laubach, Jessica Cooper, and Sheila Coffer all urged the graduating class to continue to value the education received and lessons learned at CCCC and to use them as the foundation for success in school, in work, and in life. Cooper quoted basketball great Michael Jordan on his many failures during his career, including losing 300 games. She compared his continued striving to succeed to the graduates' efforts.

"If there was some obstacle or failure that has happened, we have obviously overcome it to be sitting here today," she said. "So, a big thank you on a winning season to all our teammates, our educational coaches, our personal trainers and all fans who have supported us, many of whom are here today. Congratulations Class of 2012! Game on!"
Central Carolina Community College hosted a 50th Anniversary event at its Harnett County Campus and the community came out to celebrate with it.

"CCCC has been a real blessing to the people of Harnett County," said County Commissioner Dan Andrews. "I'm amazed how far it's come and the jobs it's created. It gives people who want to learn a chance to learn a trade that will help them get a job. It's also a stepping-stone for those who want to continue their education. Now, we're thrilled to have the new Health Sciences Building going up."

The college, then known as the Lee County Industrial Education Center, offered its first extension classes in 1961. In 1965, it expanded into Harnett County, offering adult education and vocational classes. From that modest beginning, it has grown in Harnett until it now offers curriculum, continuing education, career and college readiness, enrichment, and compensatory education classes at its full-service campus in Lillington, West Harnett Center, Lillington Adult Education Center, Triangle South Enterprise Center, and other locations.

The anniversary celebration featured the 12th Annual CCCC Foundation Furniture Auction and a Barbecue Cook-off, as well as services and demonstrations provided by students in the college's cosmetology, barbering, laser and photonics, machining, and healthcare occupations programs.

At the Foundation Furniture Auction, an overflow crowd of almost 200 enjoyed taking part, as bidders or watchers, as more than 100 pieces of handcrafted wood and metal items went up for bid. The college's carpentry and welding students at the Harnett Correctional Institution made all the pieces. More than $28,000 was raised. Profits from the event help to provide scholarships for students.

"We had perfect weather, a beautiful day, a large crowd, a great auction, and the barbecue was delicious," CCCC President Bud Marchant said of the anniversary celebration. "We are so grateful for the support of and commitment to CCCC by the Harnett community."

Central Carolina Community College’s Golden Gala shone with the talents and enthusiasm of those at the center of its existence for a half-century: students.

Community and government leaders, area residents, and alumni of CCCC gathered June 28, 2012, at the Dennis A. Wicker Civic Center as the college paid its final tribute to its 50th Anniversary year.

CCCC offered its first class in 1961 and now enrolls many thousands of students each year in university transfer, vocational, technical, enrichment, and college and career readiness programs via seated classes and distance education. Current students and graduates planned, designed, set up and carried out the event; helped create and perform a historical “Send Up”; prepared and served the refreshments; and greeted and guided those attending.

Students in the college’s Harnett Correctional Institution carpentry class created a time capsule for the occasion. The faceplate engraving was done in the Laser and Photonics Technology class. College artifacts from the past 50 years were placed in the capsule, to be opened in 2062.

The Natural Chef Culinary Arts class prepared and served the refreshments, while the Wedding and Gala Event Planning class acted as the caterer. Guests enjoyed “Send Up,” a series of hilarious musical skits taking the audience on a rapid tour of the five decades of CCCC’s history. Most of the ensemble were current and former students. College Student Ambassadors welcomed and directed visitors.

“It’s good that the college put this event into the hands of the students,” said Ambassador Kimberley Laster, of Harnett County. “This shows the true spirit of CCCC, our belief as a school, where our heart lies: It is founded on students.”

The 50th Anniversary celebration culminated with the unveiling of CCCC’s new logo: four stylized “Cs” symbolizing the college’s forward momentum in excellence. At the close of the Gala, President Bud Marchant blew out the candles on a birthday cake for the college, bringing the 50th Anniversary celebration to a close.
The Caterpillar Youth Apprenticeship Program in welding held an open house at the college’s Industry Training Center in the Lee County Industrial Park, where the students were welcomed.

“Exciting” was the word most used at the kickoff for the new Caterpillar Youth Apprenticeship Program in welding.

“I’m really excited about this,” said Linda Shook, chair of the Lee County Board of Commissioners. “One of the strongest economic development tools we have is skilled people ready to take on jobs.”

The kickoff, held at Lee County High School for education and community leaders, celebrated the partnership among Caterpillar, Central Carolina Community College, Lee County Schools and the N.C. Department of Labor in establishing the apprenticeship that will benefit students, industry and economic development.

“This is an exciting day,” said CCCC President Bud Marchant. “Manufacturing in the USA is back and Lee County is at the center of that renaissance.”

Through the two-year program, which started in fall 2012, selected high school juniors and seniors are earning their high school diploma, college certificate in welding, and NCDOL youth apprenticeship certificate. They also are receiving customized training through the college and Caterpillar, and working part time at the Caterpillar plant. When they complete the program, they will be qualified as entry-level welders, ready to work at Caterpillar or other companies.

“We recognized that we don’t have a sufficient pipeline of manpower to man our new fabrication plant,” said Julie Ammons, Human Resources director for Caterpillar-Sanford. “This apprenticeship program ensures that we will have the talent and skill to fill our manpower needs.”

Caterpillar’s new fabrication facility in the Lee County Industrial Park is bringing jobs back to the United States from Mexico.

“This apprenticeship program is one of the greatest things I’ve seen since coming to Lee County,” said Aaron Fleming, director of Career and Technical Education for Lee County Schools. “We’re here today to make a very loud statement that apprenticeships are back.”

Central Carolina Community College has been ranked second in North Carolina and 65th in the nation among community colleges in helping its students graduate or transfer, according to research done for CNNMoney.

CNNMoney is the world’s largest business web site, the exclusive business site of CNN, and the online home of Fortune and Money magazines.

An article on its web site, “Community college: How to avoid ‘dropout factories’,” discussed a report by College Measures, a joint venture of the American Institutes of Research and the Matrix Knowledge Group. At the request of CNNMoney, College Measures developed a searchable “success rating,” for community colleges based on each school’s federally reported graduation and transfer rates.

It included the rankings for all community colleges in the nation with a full-time freshman enrollment of 200 or more. The colleges were ranked based on the percentage of students who graduated with an associate degree or transferred to a four-year college or university within three years.

CNNMoney pointed out that tuition at four-year colleges is skyrocketing, so a growing number of high school seniors are looking to community colleges as a low-cost option. It said that there is very little standardized information to help students compare community colleges. This ranking provides one more tool in helping them select colleges with proven track records of graduating students and sending them on to four-year institutions.

“CCCC’s board of trustees is extremely proud of the administration, faculty and students in making the college the outstanding institution it is,” said Julian Philpott, board chairman. “We were ranked second in North Carolina, but we feel we are No. 1. We are excited about the prospects of the college as it continues to evolve. It will continue to provide training for better paying jobs and bring new jobs and industries to our service area. The report indicates that our university transfer program is highly successful – it’s a testament to our outstanding faculty and the quality of students we have at CCCC.”

Hundreds of students receive their degrees each year from CCCC and continue their educations successfully at four-year institutions.

Central Carolina Community College achieves Silver STARS ranking

The Association for the Advancement of Sustainability in Higher Education awarded Central Carolina Community College a Silver ranking for its achievements in sustainability. Only 61 colleges and universities in the United States and Canada earned that ranking.

"CCCC is known as ‘Green Central’ for its leadership in sustainable education and commitment to the environment,” said college President Bud Marchant.

"We are pleased to have achieved the Silver ranking in our first year of membership in the Association for the Advancement of Sustainability in Higher Education. We look on this accomplishment as the foundation for our continuing efforts to make our programs, equipment, facilities and campuses models for sustainability education and environmentally sound practices."

The Silver ranking is based on the Sustainability Tracking, Assessment & Rating System (STARS) developed by AASHE. It was the first national effort to encourage sustainability practices at institutions of higher education.

In the letter notifying CCCC of its ranking, the AASHE STARS Team described CCCC’s Silver ranking as “an impressive achievement.”

STARS enables colleges and universities to do a self-evaluation based on sustainability-related criteria set by the association, including Education & Research; Operations; Planning, Administration and Engagement; and Innovation. Points are earned based on how well the institution has met specific requirements within each criterion.

CCCC Sustainability Coordinator Laura Lauffer said that North Carolina’s government has a strong commitment to sustainability, creating policies that the college followed in areas such as energy use and procurement to improve its sustainability.

“The STARS program offered the college a tool to track our achievements,” she said. “While focusing on the environment in some areas, STARS also addresses programs, policies and procedures. We will use the STARS report to guide improvements and continue our excellent achievement in many areas, especially sustainability offerings throughout our college departments.

CCCC’s Sustainable Technology Center at the Chatham Campus, with its solar panels and green roof, demonstrate the college’s commitment to sustainability.
At the CCCC Foundation’s Annual Scholarship Luncheon, scholarship recipients had the opportunity to meet the donors or the families of those for whom their scholarships were named. Many were people who had contributed much to CCCC during their lifetimes and were memorialized with a scholarship.

Among those remembered were J. Shelton and Clarice Wicker.

“Both J. Shelton and Clarice were big supporters of this college,” said Alisa Wicker, their daughter-in-law. “[Their son] Dennis and I established this scholarship as a way to honor them and help others. When you hear the stories of the recipients, it makes you proud to be part of the scholarship program.”

The luncheon was held in the Dennis A. Wicker Civic Center, named for J. Shelton’s son, who also served as a college trustee and in the state legislature. There, he was instrumental in getting state funding for the facility.

Samuel R. Miriello worked tirelessly for an industrial education center in Harnett County. It opened in Lillington in 1985 and, in recognition of his efforts, the administration building on the Harnett Campus is named for him.

“My dad worked like a Trojan to get the center built,” said Ron Miriello, retired CCCC Vice President. “He loved the college and every year it’s a blessing to know that the Samuel R. Miriello Scholarship is helping students to get their education.”

Tommy Bridges represented the James F. and Dixie B. Bridges Memorial Scholarship, named for his parents. His father was a founding trustee and served for 27 years, the longest of any trustee. Tommy himself served 12 years as a trustee.

“The most fulfilling thing is coming here and hearing the testimonies of people who receive scholarships,” he said. “My dad always took so much pride on being here at the beginning of the college. He wasn’t a man of a lot of words. If he could be here today, he would just roll his cigar around in his mouth and grin to see how the college has grown.”

Piedmont Biofuels research director Rachel Burton, Lee County Sheriff Tracy Carter, and Central Carolina Community College lead history instructor Dr. Anthony Harrington were honored as the recipients of the college’s first Distinguished Alumni Awards during the college’s 50th Anniversary Gala on June 2, 2012.

They were selected from a field of nominees based on demonstrated dedication and support for CCCC and/or the CCCC Foundation; community service in Chatham, Harnett, or Lee counties; and outstanding achievements. “We are delighted to honor these outstanding graduates,” said CCCC President Bud Marchant. “Our mission as a college is to empower people through education and training so that they can continue to pursue their dreams, excel in their accomplishments, and serve their communities. Rachel Burton, Sheriff Tracy Carter and Dr. Anthony Harrington are excellent examples of that.”

Sheriff Tracy Carter

Sheriff Tracy Carter, of Sanford, received an Associate of Arts in 1987. He served as a jail officer, deputy sheriff, DARE officer, and Chief of Special Police for Lee County Schools before being elected Lee County sheriff in 2006. Carter gives back to his community through outreaches such as the Sheriff Department’s Elderly Care Program and participation in “Lee County Dances with the Stars.”

Dr. Anthony Harrington

Dr. Anthony Harrington, of Broadway, received a diploma in Radio-TV Broadcast in 1977 and an A.A. in 1983. He has been a highly respected instructor at the college for almost 30 years. His community service includes Buffalo Masonic Lodge #172, AMRAN Temple of the Shriners, Mt. Pisgah Presbyterian Church, and Campbell University National Alumni Board of Trustees.

Rachel Burton

Rachel Burton, of Moncure, graduated with honors from CCCC in 2000 with an AAS in Automotive Technology and a certificate in Sustainable Agriculture. She co-founded and is now research director at Piedmont Biofuels. In 2011, she was named Biodiesel Researcher of the Year. She is also a founding board member of The Abundance Foundation.

Endowments

A named endowment may be established at Central Carolina Community College with a minimum of $10,000.00. The initial funds, along with any additional gifts made throughout the years, remain permanently in the corpus of the endowment. An endowment becomes a perpetual source of funding for whatever the donor wishes to achieve for the good of the college and community. Scholarships, program needs, and other specified awards are made from the accrued earnings and in accordance with any guidelines set forth by the endowment. If you are interested in learning more about naming opportunities, please contact the CCC Foundation at (919) 718-7231.

The steps of the Dennis A. Wicker Civic Center overflowed with the spirit of generosity as scholarship donors gathered for a group photo at the 2011 CCCC Foundation Scholarship Banquet. Scholarship donations and endowments enabled the Foundation to provide $180,000 in scholarships to 225 students during the 2011 - 2012 school year. At the banquet, the donors met the students they assisted and the students thanked them personally for helping to make their education possible.
With your help – We did it!

We extend our sincere gratitude to the event sponsors, players, volunteers and Sanford Golf Course employees who helped make our 22nd Annual CCCC Foundation Golf Classic a success! With the help of our friends, we were able to raise $38,000 for scholarships, student emergency funds, and other award programs that advance the mission of the college. Your generous support is greatly needed and appreciated!
