Report To The Community
and 2009 Calendar

Creating Success

Hope Opportunity Success

Dear Friends,

It is indeed an honor to have been selected as the fifth president of Central Carolina Community College. This last year has brought with it change, challenge and opportunity for the College. Since I took office in August, I have visited our campus sites, instructional locations and the surrounding communities. CCCC will continue to be known as the College that makes a difference in people's lives.

As we build for the future, we also take time to review the past. I am pleased to present the 2007—2008 Central Carolina Community College Annual Report for your review. The following pages provide a snapshot of the College's recent history. They also provide a way for us to say "Thank You" to the many people who are truly responsible for the success as well as the future of CCCC—the faculty and staff, the Board of Trustees, the Foundation Board of Directors and our many donors.

I would like to express a special thank you to the Foundation Board of Directors for their commitment to the success of our students, programs and employees. We are indeed fortunate to have the support of so many dedicated individuals who give of themselves year after year. I would also like to thank our generous donors for supporting Central Carolina Community College. In today's era of shrinking state appropriations, we simply cannot succeed without you. Please accept the most heartfelt thanks from the entire CCCC family. On behalf of Central Carolina Community College and all of the trustees who so proudly serve this wonderful institution, we express our gratitude for your enduring commitment to the College and offer best wishes for the year ahead.

— Dr. T. Eston "Bud" Marchant, President

Investing In Opportunity

A named endowment may be established at Central Carolina Community College with a minimum of $10,000.00. The initial funds, along with any additional gifts made throughout the years, remain permanently in the corpus of the endowment. An endowment becomes a perpetual source of funding for whatever the donor wishes to achieve for the good of the college and community. Scholarships and other specified awards are made from the accrued earnings and in accordance with any guidelines set forth by the endowment. If you are interested in learning more about a named endowment, please contact the CCCC Foundation at (919) 718-7231.

SACS reaffirms Central Carolina Community College's accreditation

At its June 26, 2008, business meeting, the Commission on Colleges of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools (SACS) reaffirmed Central Carolina Community College's accreditation with no follow-up reports required.

"This successful 10-year review is a testament to the college's quality and accountability," said Dr. Matthew Garrett, CCCC president at the time. He retired September 1, 2008.

The reaffirmation process was a lengthy one, extending over three years and involving many faculty, staff, and administrators who put in long hours to achieve the impressive result. The compliance report writing team wrote and compiled several thousand pages to document that the college is in compliance with the SACS Principles of Accreditation.

The SACS team was impressed with the college's new Quality Enhancement Plan, the employees, and the "energy, creativity, and camaraderie" at the college.

The summary effect of this SACS decision is that CCCC's accreditation is reaffirmed for the next 10 years. Recent changes to the process require a mid-term review for all colleges and universities, and CCCC's mid-term review will take place in 2013.

"It's almost impossible to explain to the general public the time, energy, and effort that goes into a reaffirmation of accreditation process," said Garrett (Then-President Matt Garrett). "This news means that three years of very hard work on the part of a lot of people has now been completed with outstanding results. I am very pleased to be leaving the college in great shape with our major accrediting body, so that the next president inherits a good situation."

Central Carolina Community College has received its reaffirmation of accreditation for the next 10 years from SACS. This verifies that the college has the resources, programs, and services to accomplish its purposes.

"This successful review is a testament to the college's quality and accountability."

Black history a shared history

Martin Luther King Jr., W.E.B. Dubois, J. Phillip Randolph – these and many other names stand out in the history of African-Americans, according to history instructor Robert Barnes.

February is Black History Month and Barnes presented a historical view of it at the college's Chatham County Campus, where he teaches.

"Black history is American history," Barnes said. "It should foster the understanding of culture and break down prejudices. We all have a shared heritage."

Black History Month grew out of Black History Week, established in 1926 by the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History, now the Association for the Study of African-American Life and History.

Barnes spoke on "Slavery and Its Legacy," "Black Leadership," and "The Creation and Cultivation of the Black Identity," weaving together the interaction of African-American leaders and social and world events.

Black leaders, such as Frederick Douglass, appeared first during the era of slavery. Douglass was a run-away slave who became an articulate abolitionist leader. He helped influence white anti-slavery societies in the North.

Black leadership grew in the decades following Emancipation. The leaders emphasized education, equal treatment, political empowerment, and an understanding of the history and contributions of African-Americans to the nation.

February 2009

Even as Jim Crow laws became more entrenched in the South during the 1920s, many blacks moved northward. Music, literature, and art by African-Americans burgeoned during the Harlem Renaissance/New Negro Movement of the 1920s and 1930s.

In World Wars I and II, the almost all-black 92nd Battalion fought bravely in France and Italy. In Europe, they saw a society without racial segregation. Many brought the determination to achieve that back to the United States, Barnes said. In the 1960s, leaders such as the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. called for judging people by the content of their character, not the color of their skin, and legal barriers to equal rights were broken down.

Ramona Leftwich, Continuing Education administrative specialist on the Chatham County Campus, shared her talent as a dancer during a Black History Month event at the campus. Ramona wore a heavily embroidered burgundy dress and head cover made in Ghana.

"Black history is American history."

Central Carolina Community College named a Career Readiness Certification site

Central Carolina Community College has been designated as a Career Readiness Certification site by the North Carolina Community College System. Pam Gobel, N.C. coordinator for Career Readiness Certification, visited the college to launch the program at the campuses in Chatham, Harnett, and Lee counties.

The Career Readiness Certificate is a portable skills credential, stating a job seeker's or worker's levels of competence in the foundational workplace skills of reading, math, and information location. The skill levels are keyed to ACT Inc.'s WorkKeys national job skills assessment system. WorkKeys analyzed about 5,000 job profiles to determine which skill levels are needed for the jobs.

The college's Human Resources Development Division received a $28,000 grant from the NCCCS to establish a CRC assessment site at the college's Jonesboro Center in Sanford. The center administers CRC assessments to job seekers and employees.

Based on scores, a person is certified at a bronze, silver, or gold level of skill. Gold means that the person has the assessed skill levels required in 90 percent of jobs; silver, skills required for 65 percent; and bronze, 35 percent. With a state CRC, a person can obtain a national CRC, recognized nationwide.

- The CRC saves employers time and cost by enabling them to hire workers who have the skill levels needed. The CRC also has a statewide database that serves as an economic development tool by enabling industries to check, by geographic area, zip code, skill levels, and other criteria, exactly where the workers are who have the skill levels the industries need.

The N.C. Workforce Development Commission sponsors the CRC in partnership with the N.C. Community College System, Workforce Development boards, JobLink career centers, Employment Security Commission, and Division of Vocational Rehabilitation.

March 2009

Pamela Gobel, state coordinator for the N.C. Career Readiness Certification initiative, visited the campuses in Chatham, Harnett, and Lee counties to kick off the college's Career Readiness Certificate assessment and training program.

"The CRC builds partnerships between economic development, industry, and education," said Pamela Gobel, state CRC coordinator. "It is key to workers' hiring and promotion, while employers gain workers with known skills."

Chatham couple endows
scholarship

Ed and Mary Hayes Holmes, of Pittsboro, have established the Edward S. and Mary Hayes B. Holmes Endowment with the Central Carolina Community College Foundation.

"We have so many students in financial need," said Diane Glover, Foundation executive director. "It is always so wonderful when generous community members help to make it possible for them to continue their education."

The endowment will fund a $1,000 scholarship. To be eligible for it, students must have a grade point average of 2.5 (C-plus) or better. Preference will be given to students residing in Chatham County.

Ed was a long-time attorney in Pittsboro and is now a member of the CCCC Foundation Board of Directors.

"The community has done so much for us that we wanted to give back," he said of the couple's generous endowment.

The Holmes have also given a generous donation to the Chatham County Community Library, a joint project of the college and Chatham County being built on the college's Chatham County Campus.

"Ed and Mary Holmes are long-time friends of Central Carolina Community College," said President Matt Garrett. (Dr. Garrett retired September 1, 2008). "We appreciate their generosity, which will help students achieve their dreams for generations to come. Chatham County is blessed to have such generous people."

ADDENDUM: Mary Holmes passed away on August 11, 2008.

April 2009

Ed and the late Mary Hayes Holmes, of Pittsboro, established the Edward S. and Mary Hayes B. Holmes Endowment with the CCCC Foundation. The Holmes have also given generously to the Chatham County Community Library, to be built on the college's Chatham County Campus.

Central Carolina Community College
Class of 2008 graduates

Cheers filled the Dennis A. Wicker Civic Center May 9, 2008, as members of the college's Class of 2008 walked across the stage to receive their hard-earned degrees, diplomas, and certificates.

Fifty-six A.A., 12 A.S., and 151 A.A.S. degrees; 115 diplomas; and 358 certificates were earned, with some students earning multiple degrees and certificates.

"It's taken me a while," graduate José Hernandez, of Sanford, said following the degree ceremony. He earned an A.A.S. in Industrial Systems Technology and will now attend East Carolina University. "I'm the first in my family to graduate college. Without the help of God, I couldn't have done it."

Kennon Briggs, Vice President for Business and Finance for the North Carolina Community College System, delivered the commencement address.

"It's not where you begin, but where you end," he said, mentioning several students who had overcome challenges to achieve their educational goals. He challenged the graduates to go on and become contributing members of their communities, adding, "We make a living by what we get; we make a life by what we give."

Jennifer Marano receives her A.A.S. degree 19 years after graduating from high school. Bobby Powell, chairman of the Board of Trustees, congratulates her at the May 9, 2008, graduation.

It was President Matt Garrett's last spring graduation. (Dr. Garrett retired September 1, 2008.) He had the special satisfaction of seeing his son, M. Steven Garrett, Jr., receive his degree in Industrial Systems Technology.

"Graduation is always a very special day for the college because it's the culmination of months and years of hard work on the part of the students," the president told the graduating class. "As you walk across the stage, we know you are proud of your achievements. We are probably even more proud of you, because you are our finished product."

You are why this college exists. Teaching will always be what the heart of this college is about."

Trey Bowden, holding son Tre-Shawn, looks proudly at his wife, Tiana Murchison, following her graduation. Tiana worked hard for seven years to earn her Business degree and plans to continue her education at N.C. State University.

*"It's not where you begin,
but where you end."*

Quality furniture, items at Central Carolina Community College
auction

Central Carolina Community College Foundation's Seventh Annual Auction raised more than $15,000. The proceeds will be used for a scholarship endowment for a student from Harnett County, as well as the purchase of materials for the carpentry and welding classes at the Harnett Correctional Institution.

The June 7, 2008, event featured beautifully handcrafted wood furniture as well as a variety of welded items. All were created by students in the college's carpentry and welding classes at HCI. The auction took place in the Multipurpose Room of the Miriello Building on the Harnett County Campus.

"Part of our college's expectations for all students is that they will do some community service," said Bill Tyson, CCCC provost for Harnett County. "The building of the furniture and other items and their auctioning by the Foundation gives our students at the prison a chance to do something that benefits the community. These folks will be going back into the community – anything we can do to connect them in a positive way is a good thing."

Among the items auctioned were a six-foot china hutch made with 100-year-old pine, oak trestle table with chairs, oak mirrored armoire, oak jewelry/lingerie chest, pine blanket chest, pine storage bench, pine steamer trunk, outdoor fire pit, metal birdbaths, and a 10-foot-by-18-foot storage barn.

June 2009

Handsome and well-made furniture was up for bid at the Foundation's seventh annual auction, in July 2008, including a beautiful, handcrafted oak buffet with glass doors. All pieces were made by students in the college's carpentry and welding classes at Harnett Correctional Institution.

"Part of our college's expectations for all students is that they will do some community service."

Central Carolina Community College
dental hygiene students offer services

Lying on his back, with his mouth illuminated by a dentist's lamp, patient Dustin Harrington did as he was told. Then, dental hygiene student Mark Williamson gently picked at Harrington's teeth, cleaning them.

Williamson is studying dental hygiene at the college. That program, as well as dental assisting, was started in 2007. Both have received their initial accreditation from the American Dental Association. The programs are located in the college's Dental Programs Clinic, a state-of-the-art facility at the W.B. Wicker Business Campus in Sanford.

The dental hygiene students have spent almost a year learning about teeth and how to clean, x-ray, scale, root plane, lighten, and do fluoride treatments. They now want the public, wherever they live, to come to the clinic and take advantage of their services.

Harrington, a Sanford resident, did so recently. It was the first time he had come to the clinic for a teeth cleaning – he was impressed.

"The clinic has excellent service and facilities," he said.

Williamson smiled at the compliment. He's doing what he loves. The 1994 Lee County High School graduate is a veteran, having served nine years with the U.S. Army.

● "When I was in the Army, I went to a dentist," he said. "I decided working on people's teeth was something I could do and enjoy."

● He earned an associate degree at CCCC and was about to enroll for his dental hygiene studies at a university when the college started its program. That made getting his training much more convenient for the Sanford resident – and a lot less expensive.

● Across the hall in the Wicker Business Campus is the Central Carolina Dental Center, operated by the Lee County Health Department. After the CCCC hygienists do their part, patients may go to the Center or to a local dentist to continue their dental health.

July 2009

Dustin Harrington (reclining), of Sanford, opens wide so Mark Williamson, a student in the college's dental hygiene program, can clean his teeth. Williamson became interested in becoming a hygienist while serving in the U.S. Army.

"I decided working on people's teeth was something I could do and enjoy."

Central Carolina Community College
selected to offer biofuels degree program

At its September 2007 meeting, the N.C. Community College System's Board of Trustees granted CCCC the distinction of becoming the first in the state to offer a biofuels associate degree program.

The two-year program, "Alternative Energy Technology: Biofuels," and related certificate programs will provide the biofuels industry with workforce development and training. The degree program started in fall 2008.

"Biofuels degree graduates will qualify for numerous positions within the industry," said Andrew McMahan, CCCC biofuels coordinator. "Employment opportunities include, but are not limited to, plant technician, plant manager, lab technician, sales manager, process coordinator, or business owner."

The N.C. Strategic Plan for Biofuels Leadership has identified workforce development as a key factor in growing the industry. To accomplish this, the college has worked closely with industry and will work closely with the North Carolina Biofuels Center to determine workforce training needs, McMahan said.

The college's Chatham County Campus, in Pittsboro, has been offering biofuels classes since 2002. Rachel Burton, of Pittsboro, a graduate of both the college's sustainable agriculture and automotive mechanics programs, combined her interests and proposed teaching a biofuels class. The college approved.

August 2009

- From that first class, biofuels education has grown each year with strong support from numerous state agencies and industry. (Rachel went on to co-found Piedmont Biofuels, in Pittsboro.)

The biofuels curriculum program will be housed in a new $3.8 million, 18,000-square-foot Sustainable Technologies Classroom and Lab Building on the Chatham Campus. It will facilitate the training of students in methods and on equipment used in both biodiesel and ethanol production, including a seed crusher, small-scale biodiesel reactor, and ethanol production facility.

The building itself will be "green," built to the U.S. Green Building Council's Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED) standards.

P.J. Bordelon, fuel distribution manager for Piedmont Biofuels, in Pittsboro, is one of the first students in the college's Alternative Energy Technology: Biofuels degree program.

"We're setting the industry standard for biofuels workforce development in North Carolina."

Central Carolina Community College Foundation Golf Classic

The Central Carolina Community College Foundation's 18th Annual Golf Classic scored a hole-in-one as 172 players gathered at Sanford Golf Course on September 26, 2007 for the event. Even the weather was having a good day as it smiled on the players competing in the morning Captain's Choice or the afternoon Best Ball tournaments.

Local businesses, industries, and organizations sponsored teams for the competition, which is the foundation's largest fundraiser. Proceeds are used primarily to provide scholarships for CCCC students taking classes at the college's campuses in Chatham, Harnett, and Lee counties or by distance education. The 2007 event raised about $35,000.

Captain's Choice

Jaye Tyner, of the Sanford Women's Club, met recipient Christie Smoak at the 2007 Scholarship Banquet. The names of generous donors who establish scholarships for the college through the CCCC Foundation are recognized on the college's "Wall of Honor" in the Dennis A. Wicker Civic Center.

Central Carolina Community College
Scholarship Banquet
celebrates harvest of education

A special kind of harvest was celebrated at the Dennis A. Wicker Civic Center on October 23, 2007: education.

Central Carolina Community College and the CCCC Foundation hosted their Scholarship Banquet, bringing together donors and recipients.

Among those enjoying the get-together were student Lori Sweinhart and donor, Mary Lynn Keith, both of Sanford. Keith endowed the J. Linwood Keith Memorial Nursing Scholarship in memory of her late husband. That scholarship is helping Sweinhart to reach for her dream.

"I was a bartender for 21 years," said Sweinhart, a youthful-looking grandmother of two. "Then a friend persuaded me to go to college. The scholarship made the difference between going and not going. I'm going for my Licensed Practical Nurse certificate, then I'm going on to get my RN from CCCC."

That's the kind of story that keeps community members, businesses, and organizations donating to the CCCC Foundation to establish scholarships.

"It makes me feel wonderful to know that here is an older student wanting to go to college and that I could help," Keith said.

Speaker Ron Miriello, then-CCCC vice president for Educational and Student Support Services, said that it was appropriate to hold the

October

Scholarship Banquet during the harvest season. (Miriello retired in 2008.)

"We appreciate the harvest of scholarship funds given to our students," he said. "Because of the generosity of donors, major changes are taking place in their lives. Community college graduates tend to stay in their home communities. They become the nurses, electricians, school teachers, etc. They work, buy homes, and join PTOs and local churches. When you invest in your community college, your investment stays in your county."

At the CCCC Foundation Scholarship Banquet October 23, 2007, John Thomas Davenport Memorial Scholarship recipient Candice Akridge, of Cameron, Harnett County, got to meet the scholarship donors, Tommy and Jean Davenport, of Sanford.

"When you invest in your community college, your investment stays in your county."

CCCC breaks ground for West Harnett Center

The mood was festive as Central Carolina Community College, Harnett County, state and community leaders gathered in September 2007 for the official groundbreaking of the college's new West Harnett Center.

The 8,500-square-foot Center, being built on a 15-acre site in the Western Harnett Industrial Park, will be the college's first permanent facility in the western part of the county.

"This is a very special day for Harnett County," Teddy Byrd, chairman of the county board of commissioners, told those gathered for the groundbreaking. "Western Harnett is one of the fastest growing areas in the state – it's right that CCCC has a presence here. It's difficult to overstate the value of the college in Harnett County."

The West Harnett Center will serve both general educational needs as well as workforce training for companies and industries that locate in the park.

Byrd said that bringing a CCCC facility to western Harnett took a collaborative effort among the college, county, Western Harnett Industrial Park board of directors, and Harnett Forward Together Committee.

"When groups work together, great things happen," he said.

November 2009

Marvin R. Joyner, president of CCCC from 1983 to 2004, attended the groundbreaking. In 2000, he and County Commissioner Tim McNeill started the effort to get a CCCC center in western Harnett County.

"Sometimes good things take a while," Joyner said. "I'm glad to see it happen. It's going to be a great thing for western Harnett."

The $1.97 million facility is being financed with $1 million from the 2000 State Bond referendum, a $647,620 grant from the North Carolina Community College System, and $325,200 in county funding.

Central Carolina Community College, Harnett County and state officials broke ground September 6, 2007, for the college's new West Harnett Center, an 8,500-square-foot building in the Western Harnett Industrial Park.

Compensatory Education students help Santa

Santa has some helpers this season – and they're not at the North Pole.

These helpers are the Compensatory Education students at the college's Lillington Adult Education Center. Making seasonal craft items enables them to express their creative skills, helps improve dexterity, gives them a sense of accomplishment – and puts some money in their pockets.

The LAEC students have been creating beautiful Christmas ornaments recently in their crafts class. One by one, they carefully pin sequins to Styrofoam balls. Student Larry Gregory, of Coats, held up his ornament for all to admire. Then, he smiled as instructor Elizabeth King and LAEC Continuing Education director Melody McGee encouraged the students with their artistry.

"I love my teachers," he said.

The ARC (Association for Retarded Citizens) of Harnett provides funding for materials for these special projects, as well as volunteering in the Compensatory Education program. The ornaments and other crafts the students create are sold and the students get to keep all the proceeds.

When not doing crafts, arts, or music, the students learn basics such as dish washing, personal hygiene, reading, sign language, and cooking in their life-skill classes. Community living, consumer education, and vocational education are also an important part of their training.

December 2009

According to King, North Carolina is one of only two states that offer compensatory education beyond high school to intellectually disabled adults. Public schools offer compensatory education through age 22. In Harnett County, intellectually disabled adults age 18 and older can transfer to the LAEC or Harnett Production Enterprises.

HPE provides training and employment for the high-functioning intellectually disabled. The LAEC serves about 40 students whose abilities range from pre-kindergarten to third grade. CCC provides the compensatory education instructors at both facilities.

Son's run raises money for late dad's scholarship fund

'Miles for Merritt,' a fund-raising run by Burdette Robinson, of Richmond, Virginia raised more than $1,000 to add to the Merritt Robinson Memorial Scholarship Fund at Central Carolina Community College.

The scholarship fund honors Burdette's father, who worked at the college from 1970 until his retirement in 1994, serving as the long-time dean of Occupational Education and Curriculum Planning. Merritt Robinson lived in Sanford from 1958 until his passing on March 21, 2007.

"Dad came from incredibly humble beginnings, but he saw the value of education and committed his life to helping others get it," Burdette said. "My brother, Bryan, is a graduate of Central Carolina. My family hopes this scholarship makes it easier for students to get an education."

Burdette enjoys running marathons and got the idea to make his participation in a recent one in Richmond a fund-raiser for his father's scholarship fund, which was established when Merritt passed away. It provides a scholarship annually for a student from Chatham, Harnett, or Lee counties who is majoring in business technology.

"Merritt was a great encourager, always cheerful, always smiling, always ready to share a laugh," said Central Carolina C.C. President Matt Garrett. (Dr. Garrett retired September 1, 2008.) "He loved the term, MBWA: 'Management by Walking Around'. Everyday he would wander the hallways talking with faculty and students, sharing words of encouragement and a laugh. Our college is a better place today, because Merritt gave of himself here for many years."
