

2009-2010 Report To The Community and 2011 Calendar

December

Dear Friends of Central Carolina Community College,

Every year, as the annual report is coming together, it is a time of reflection on the previous year.

Over the past year, Central Carolina Community College experienced record enrollments, moved forward on numerous initiatives, and neared completion on several new buildings. Most importantly, the college continued to be a valuable asset to the community, and I told people that wherever I went.

CCCC continues to play a vital role in our community by providing workforce training that is relevant for the jobs of today and tomorrow. As such, there are thousands of examples of the tremendous impact the college has made on lives in our community, across our state, and beyond.

This annual report highlights this impact and is also an inspiring story of “empowering people through education and training” – the mission of the college. This mission directs how we educate our citizens and serve our community in the years to come.

We thank each and every one of you for your generous support. Your gifts have provided numerous scholarships, helped secure needed resources, and ensured that our faculty and staff have access to professional development opportunities – all during challenging financial times.

As we look to the year ahead, we must remember that our college’s greatest assets, whatever the economic climate, are its exceptional students, talented faculty and administration, and deeply committed friends and partners, including a devoted Foundation Board of Directors and college Board of Trustees.

Together, we will work to ensure that our college remains strong. With your continued support and assistance, we can influence tomorrow’s success of the students, faculty, staff, and programs at Central Carolina Community College.

I hope you will take time to read this report that highlights our extraordinary college and its unlimited possibilities. I am confident you will find our featured accomplishments as innovative, substantial, and exciting as I do.

We look forward to working with you over the next year.
Thank you for making a difference!

– Dr. T. Eston “Bud” Marchant
President, Central Carolina Community College

Mark Valle, of Harnett County, gives his mother, Araceli Valle, a big hug after receiving his GED at the Adult High School/GED January graduation. He was one of three student speakers at the event. Valle had dropped out of high school to help support his family, but later enrolled at CCCC. He plans to continue his education.

Adult High School/GED programs celebrate graduation

The Dennis A. Wicker Civic Center was filled with proud family and friends January 21 as the college's Adult High School/GED program held its winter commencement.

The audience rose to their feet to honor the members of the graduating class as they entered the hall. The graduating students smiled, standing a little taller in their blue robes at this recognition for what they had achieved.

Three of them delivered commencement addresses: Teresa Ward, of Chatham County; Mark Valle, of Harnett County; and Daniqua Davis, of Lee County.

Ward dropped out of high school at the age of 16. Twenty-five years later, she stood at the podium as an honor graduate about to receive her high school diploma. Making the event even more special was the fact that her son, Darryl Crim, was also receiving his.

Valle, 23 and the oldest of five children, dropped out of high school to help support his family. He finally decided to get his GED, but he struggled. He told his mother that he was going to quit, but she said quitting was easy; not giving up was the hard part.

"I stuck it out and here I am," he said. "If you left school, go back. It will be worth all the hard work."

Davis, 18, urged her fellow graduates to continue their education. She took her own advice by also earning her CNA certificate from the college.

The graduating class moved their cap tassels from the right side to the left, symbolizing their graduation. With that, the audience spontaneously rose again, applauding and cheering while the new graduates tossed their hats in the air and hugged each other. They had committed themselves to success, struggled to achieve it, and now, a brighter future awaited them.

Central Carolina Community College's Associate Degree Nursing program has been named the Louise L. Tuller School of Nursing in gratitude for a gift of more than $335,000 from her trust to the Louise L. Tuller Nurse Education Endowment at the CCCC Foundation. The naming plaque was unveiled February 10.

Nursing program named for Louise L. Tuller

The nursing profession was always close to the heart of Louise L. Tuller, who was both a businesswoman and a registered nurse during her lifetime. Now, 32 years after her death, the Associate Degree Nursing program at Central Carolina Community College has been named the Louise L. Tuller School of Nursing.

The naming is in appreciation for a gift of more than $335,000 from the Louise L. Tuller Trust. This is the first time the college has named a program in recognition of a financial contribution.

College administrators and trustees, CCCC Foundation directors, and members of the trust's board of directors gathered February 10 to unveil the naming plaque. It is now mounted in Lett Hall on the college's Lee County Campus, where the ADN program is located.

"We thank the trust's board of directors for this very special gift," said President Bud Marchant. "It will greatly benefit nursing education at the college and benefit communities as the graduates of this program go out and serve."

In 2006, the trust established the Louise L. Tuller Nurse Education Endowment with the CCCC Foundation. The trust had contributed more than $75,000 to the endowment. The additional donation to the endowment of the trust balance of $335,000 constitutes the largest private gift given to the college, to date.

"It's an honor to give these funds to the college for its nursing program," said Harry Miller, trust chairman. "I knew Mrs. Tuller and it was her dream to honor nursing and help young people get an education to be nurses."

Tuller, a Canadian by birth, lived in Bainbridge, N.Y., for many years. She retired to Sanford, where she was an active member of St. Thomas Episcopal Church and a volunteer at Lee County Hospital until she passed away in 1978.

The Automotive Service Association of North Carolina has established the Troy Byrd Scholarship to benefit automotive students.

Automotive scholarship honors Troy Byrd

Troy Byrd loved the auto repair industry. For 52 years, he operated Byrd Garage, in Lillington, finally retiring at the age of 83. Byrd, a Lillington native, passed away in 2003 at the age of 87.

At his funeral, it was said that he had many young friends because he was so willing to mentor them as they worked on their cars. Now, other young people who love to work on cars may receive help paying for their Automotive Systems Technology education at Central Carolina Community College thanks to the new Troy Byrd Scholarship.

His widow, Hazel, and long-time friends Reggie and Brenda Denney, of Eden, visited the college's Harnett County Campus to announce the establishment of the endowed scholarship with the CCCC Foundation.

"Troy Byrd was a good guy and a good friend," said Reggie Denney, who is a past national Automotive Service Association board chairman and a former ASANC president and vice president. "He was an association person. I'm proud we're able to continue his memory and his contributions."

Byrd had been an active member of the ASANC for as long as anyone could remember. He had served in many positions, including executive secretary. Byrd was also a founding member and served as president of the Independent Garage Owners of North Carolina. He also served a term as president of the Rotary Club of Lillington.

"Troy believed in giving back," Hazel said. "I feel super-good that he's left a legacy that will last for generations. He loved the automotive industry. Automotive repair is a profession now and this scholarship will help students train for it."

CCCC's 'Working, A Musical' a hit at Chatham Mills

Central Carolina Community College's theater classes celebrated the lives of working people with the college's 2010 spring play production, "Working, A Musical," at Chatham Mills.

The play is based on a book of interviews with workers by Pulitzer Prize-winning author Louis "Studs" Terkel: Working: People Talk About What They Do All Day and How They Feel About What They Do. The book and musical are created from the words of ordinary workers about their jobs, hopes, and aspirations.

"This show is relevant today, given the current economy and our rapidly changing workplaces/perceptions of work," said play director Ellen Bland, the college's drama and communications instructor.

The "Working" production company included more than 30 actors, artists, and musicians drawn from students in Bland's theater classes and community members with a love of – and talent for – theater.

The college's theater program has built a solid reputation for quality productions over the years. The first show, "Millworker," was created by Bland and Drew Lasater, a former student, from a volume of Southern oral history stories gathered by students at UNC-Chapel Hill. The show chronicled in word and music the everyday struggles and hopes of residents in a North Carolina mill town during the Depression. "Millworker" was acclaimed by The Raleigh News & Observer as one of the Triangle's top 10 shows of 2003.

"Working" brought to the stage this same sense of authenticity that audiences connect with.

"Arts have a welcome here," said Chatham County Commissioner Tom Vanderbeck. "Healthy arts attract businesses and residents to move here and stay here. They are an indication of a healthy community. Many kudos to the college, Ellen Bland, her students, Tom Roberts (owner of Chatham Mills), and the community for making these theater productions possible."

Central Carolina C.C. celebrates 2010 spring graduation

Central Carolina Community College's Spring 2010 commencement overflowed with excitement, joy, and enthusiasm as graduating students, their families, and friends filled the Dennis A. Wicker Civic Center.

Among the most excited were the seven members of the first Lee Early College graduating class. LEC was established at CCC's Lee County Campus in 2006 as a joint venture by the college and Lee County Schools. Students enroll in ninth grade, attend high school and college classes over a four-year period, and graduate with both a high school diploma and an associate's degree or university transfer credit.

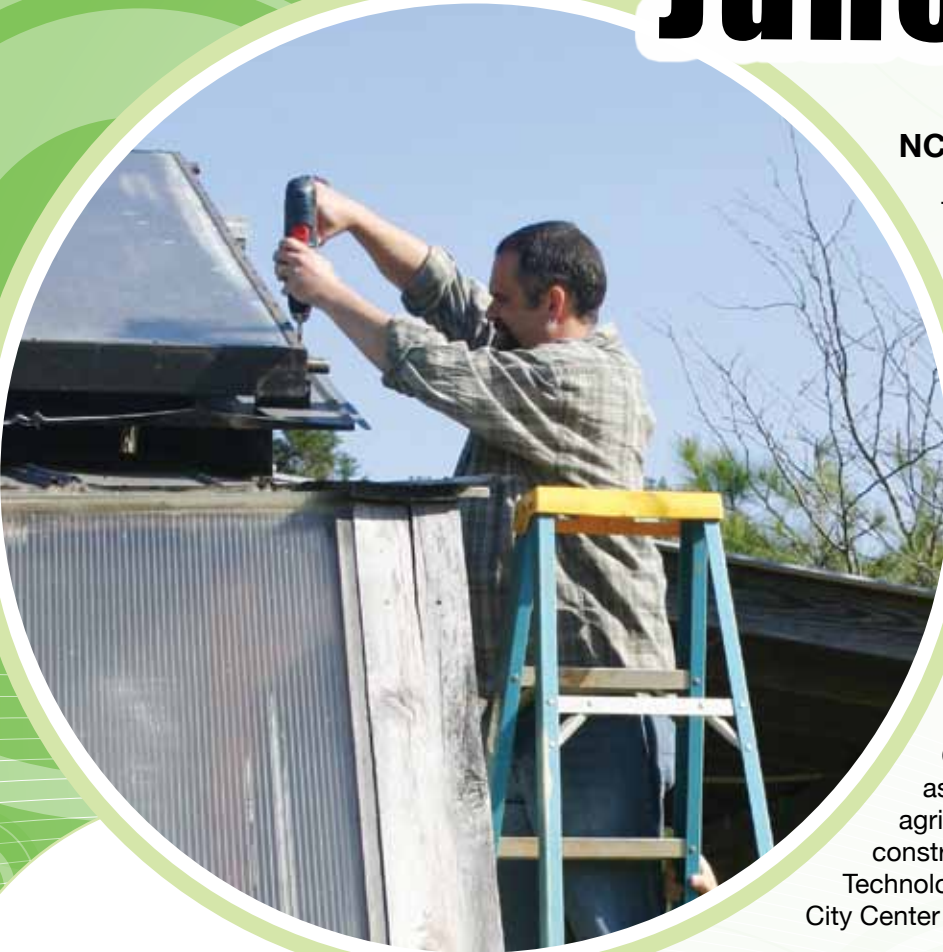

Hillary Akers, one of the LEC graduating students, said that, with Lee Early College, CCC broke through many stereotypes about adolescents, believing that high school age students could, with encouragement, achieve at the college level.

Family and friends of the Class of 2010 filled the hall with cheers – and lots of applause – as the graduating students walked across the stage to receive their degrees, diplomas, and certificates.

"This is the most exciting day on the academic calendar," CCC President Bud Marchant told the graduates. "You are about to enter the world as graduates of Central Carolina Community College. I can't say how proud we are of you. This is the day you celebrate all of your accomplishments with your friends and family."

A total of 222 Associate in Applied Science, 73 Associate in Arts, and seven Associate in Science degrees; 110 diplomas; and 360 certificates were earned by the graduating class, with some students earning more than one.

The Student Land Lab of the Sustainable Agriculture program at the Chatham County Campus added some Earth-friendly technology with the installation of a drain-back solar water heating system on its work building. The system will provide the hot water for the building. Student Eric Davis was among those installing the system.

NCCCS chooses CCCC to head Energy Sector CIP

The North Carolina Community College System's Code Green Super Curriculum Improvement Project (CIP) has recognized Central Carolina Community College's leadership in green education by selecting it as the lead college for the CIP's Energy Sector.

The Code Green Super CIP will develop uniform improvements in curriculum and continuing education green programs in six sectors: energy, transportation, engineering, technology, environment, and building. The improvements will be used at North Carolina's 58 community colleges to provide outstanding education for workers for the growing green economy.

Central Carolina was selected as a lead college because of its track record in innovation, leadership, and partnerships to promote environmental- and consumer-friendly education. CCCC was the first North Carolina community college to develop associate in applied science degree programs in sustainable agriculture and biofuels. The college is also focusing on green campus construction with its energy-efficient LEED-certified Sustainable Technologies Center, joint CCCC-Chatham Community Library, and Siler City Center in Chatham County.

"The incorporation of sustainability into courses throughout the community college system will have a tremendous impact on workforce training in North Carolina," said Andrew McMahan, CCCC's biofuels program coordinator and the Energy Sector project manager. "Strategic plans like the Code Green CIP help to ensure that North Carolina is a leader in a low-carbon future."

The college has also joined two higher education leadership groups to advance the incorporation of sustainability principles at its campuses: The Association for the Advancement of Sustainability in Higher Education and the American College & University Presidents' Climate Commitment.

July

Representatives from many senior educational institutions shared what they have to offer students during the college's University Transfer Day. Among those attending were (from left) Donna Flowers, a CCCC Accounting and Business Administration student, and Rachael Krieger, an LEC student. Carlena Mills (right), a DeVry University admissions counselor, told them of the opportunities at her school.

Central Carolina Community College exceeds NCCCS performance standards

Educational achievement at Central Carolina Community College exceeds the standards set by the North Carolina State Board of Community Colleges, according to the North Carolina Community College System's 2009 Performance Funding Measures Report.

The eight Performance Measures are core indicators of student success and capture the essential elements of the mission of community colleges. Central Carolina exceeded all of the Performance Measures standards. It was one of only 26 of the state's 58 community colleges that met or exceeded all of the standards.

The eight Performance Measures, the NCCCS standard for percentage of students achieving the measures, and the percentage achieving at CCCC were:

- Progress of Basic Skills Students: NCCCS standard – 75%, CCCC – 85%;
- Passing Rates on Licensure & Certification Examinations: NCCCS – 80% , CCCC – 83%;
- Performance of College Transfer Students: NCCCS standard – 83%, CCCC – 87%;
- Passing Rates of Students in Developmental Courses: NCCCS standard – 75% , CCCC – 79%;
- Success Rate of Developmental Students in Subsequent College-level Courses: NCCCS standard – 80%, CCCC – 95%;
- Satisfaction of Completers and Non-completers: NCCCS standard – 90%, CCCC – 98%;
- Curriculum Student Retention, Graduation, and Transfer: NCCCS standard – 65%, CCCC – 69%;
- Business Client Satisfaction with Customized Training: NCCCS standard – 90%, CCCC – 96%.

“We are pleased that we exceeded all the state standards for the Performance Measures and Standards and congratulate all those involved in this success,” said President Bud Marchant. “These scores are a clear indicator of the quality of our academic programs. We are particularly proud of the ability of our students transferring to one of the UNC system campuses to be successful there.”

Fall enrollment sets record

More than 5,000 students enrolled in Central Carolina Community College's curriculum classes for the 2009 fall semester, surpassing the previous high of 4,867 in fall 2006.

"We are delighted that residents in our service area – and beyond – recognize the college as the place to go to get a quality education, whether in preparation for transferring to a four-year institution or to get back into the workforce with a marketable skill," said college President Bud Marchant. "They know a great education is here for them at reasonable cost and at convenient locations and times."

More than 1,000 signed up for distance education classes. Marchant said this is an important and growing trend, bringing educational opportunities to people's homes or other locations that fit their schedules and lifestyles.

Programs that prepare people to enter the workforce with marketable skills showed the greatest enrollment increases. Laid-off or let-go workers came to upgrade their job skills or learn new ones.

James Flynn, of Johnsonville, worked in manufacturing for 23 years before being laid off. He came to study Industrial Systems Technology.

"With an IST degree, you can fix anything, anywhere, anytime," he said. "Every factory, every building has electrical, heating and air, and other systems. They all have to be maintained."

Transportation Systems Technologies chairman Chuck Mann said enrollment in automotive classes increased by one-third over fall 2008.

"I wasn't surprised," he said. "Jobs to maintain and repair automobiles will always be here. Cars can't be sent off to China for repair and shipped back."

Many among the 5,000 were students who planned to transfer to a four-year institution after completing the first two years of college at CCCC. They could do so at a fraction of the cost of the same education at a university – an important consideration, especially during a recession.

September

Central Carolina's ESTC impresses visitors

Dark smoke billowed from a stone building as firefighters entered to put out the fire. From the third story of another building, a SWAT police officer snatched a kidnap victim, rappelling safely down to the ground with her.

Crowds watched both exciting events – and more – as the Emergency Services Training Center of Central Carolina Community College hosted an open house. The purpose was to highlight for the public this unique facility in Sanford that attracts law enforcement, fire, and emergency medical personnel from around the nation, and even from foreign countries, for training.

The ESTC includes an administration/classroom building, live burn building, four-story rescue tower, and the 385-foot N.C. Highway Patrol VIPER radio tower used for tall-tower rescue training.

The Center, built at the former site of the Sanford-Lee County Airport, utilizes the runways for driving, vehicular pursuit, and motorcycle safety training. Its 116 acres provide plenty of room for accident training scenarios involving large vehicles such as a train tanker car and tractor-trailers.

During the Open House, visitors also saw a police vehicular pursuit, emergency medical care demonstration, fingerprinting, and motorcycle riding, all by local police and fire departments.

Lee County Commissioner Amy Dalrymple said the county commissioners showed wisdom when, rather than abandoning the airport property off Tramway Road, they decided to work with the state and college in transforming it into a regional Emergency Services Training Center for Chatham, Harnett, and Lee counties.

"It was retooled to serve as a facility for the safety and well-being of the area," Dalrymple said. "It is one of the most impressive things we've got in the county. This facility is just spectacular."

October

Jason Morris, of Apex, completed several welding certifications through a JobsNOW welding class at Central Carolina Community College's Harnett County Campus. With the skills and certifications he gained, he has now started his own welding business.

CCCC kicks off JobsNOW job training program

Retired firefighter Jack Bost waited patiently in the bustle at Central Carolina Community College's JobsNow kickoff.

Like the others at the kickoff at the Dennis A. Wicker Civic Center, he came to find a job-training program that would enable him to find employment.

"I worked in metallurgical laboratory quality control for 23 years," Bost said. "The company shut down its Sanford plant and a lot of jobs went to Mexico."

Bost also had worked as a fire fighter and emergency medical technician. With that background, he signed up for JobsNOW training as a phlebotomy technician.

Most of those attending the kickoff were displaced or dislocated workers looking for job training that would produce results within a few months. That is the goal of the JobsNOW program offered through Continuing Education. The program is in addition to the ongoing continuing education and curriculum job-training programs offered by the college. Those completing the JobsNOW training can re-enter the workforce immediately or continue their education.

JobsNOW is a statewide job-training initiative to help put unemployed people back to work as quickly as possible and boost the state's economy. JobsNOW training is offered through community colleges, with each one offering targeted workforce retraining for jobs available in its service area. Local N.C. Employment Security Commission offices are referring clients who need job retraining to the college. The ESC offices will help find jobs for those completing the programs.

"The key to improving the economy is employment, and we intend to focus on retraining programs that will prepare our local dislocated workers to reenter the workforce," said Stelfanie Williams, vice president over the college's Division of Economic and Community Development.

CCCC hosts impressive Chinese Art Show

Art created a bridge of communication between artists from mainland China and area members who came to admire their works at Central Carolina Community College's Chinese Art Exhibition in November 2009.

The show, at the McSwain Center, featured traditional Chinese paintings and calligraphy by faculty of the College of Fine Arts of Nanjing Normal University, People's Republic of China. CCCC brought the exhibition to Sanford through its partnership with North Carolina State University's Confucius Institute.

Since 2009, the college has operated a Confucius Classroom under the aegis of the Institute to bring the study of Chinese language and culture to its service area of Chatham, Harnett, and Lee counties. The partnership also enables the college to host Chinese cultural shows.

Most of the artists did not speak English, but Professor Shuya Che, of the college's Confucius Classroom, and Guanglin Dai, program manager for NCSU's Confucius Institute, translated.

Dai spoke about the various styles of Chinese calligraphy, the writing of poetry and sayings in artistically drawn Chinese characters. She used works in the exhibition to illustrate them. Visitors admired the delicate but powerful images of nature captured in the paintings and the beauty of the calligraphic works.

The artists gifted several works to the college in appreciation for hosting the exhibition and the friendship shared. Professor Yue-zi Lu created a brush painting of autumn leaves and blue birds while visitors watched, then presented it to college President Bud Marchant.

"Today was a confirmation that people in our area want to connect with other parts of the world as we become a global society," said President Marchant. "I'm excited that we were able to bring not only a great cultural resource here but also an important economic development tool as companies look for areas with a global outlook."

Jeronimo Prieta Medina took advantage of the educational opportunities offered at Central Carolina Community College. He earned his GED diploma, several Industry Systems Technology certificates, and learned how to start his own heavy equipment maintenance and repair business, JP Mechanic and Welding, at the college's Small Business Center in Chatham County.

From high school to entrepreneurship through CCC

Central Carolina Community College is the place to come whether one wants a GED diploma, vocational training, or help in creating a small business.

Jeronimo Prieta Medina, of Siler City, got all three.

In the early 1990s, he hadn't even finished high school, but he enrolled at the college's Siler City Center and earned his GED high-school equivalency diploma in 1995.

He then enrolled in Industrial Systems Technology programs at the Lee County Campus and earned certificates in welding, hydraulics, and maintenance. That prepared him to repair heavy equipment, such as excavators, scoops, and graders.

Prieta Medina had a dream of owning his own heavy equipment maintenance and repair business. He thought he was all set with the skills and equipment he needed – except he had no idea how to set up and run a business. That was when the Small Business Center at the college's Chatham County Campus came into the picture.

Gary Kibler, the Chatham SBC director, was able to tell him all that he had to do and direct him to the right people and offices to do it, from registering his business to setting up a business bank account and keeping financial records.

"It was a big eye-opener," Prieta Medina said. "Gary kept me on track."

Now, he spends a lot of his time on the road, responding to calls from companies that need him, his work ethic, and the skills he learned at CCC to keep their heavy equipment working.

"It's a real good feeling being my own boss," Prieta Medina said. "Now I wake up in the morning and I'm my own man. I'm looking at a good future."

Investing in Opportunity

A named endowment may be established at Central Carolina Community College with a minimum of $10,000.00. The initial funds, along with any additional gifts made throughout the years, remain permanently in the corpus of the endowment. An endowment becomes a perpetual source of funding for whatever the donor wishes to achieve for the good of the college and community. Scholarships, program needs, and other specified awards are made from the accrued earnings and in accordance with any guidelines set forth by the endowment. If you are interested in learning more about naming opportunities, please contact the CCCC Foundation at (919) 718-7231.

With your help – We did it!

We extend our thanks to the sponsors, players, volunteers, and Sanford Golf Club employees who helped make our 20th Annual CCCC Foundation Golf Classic a success! With the help of our friends, we were able to net more than $30,000 for our award and scholarship programs. Your support is greatly appreciated!

Foundation Statement of Financials

The community continued to show their support for Central Carolina Community College by contributing $730,000 in private gifts during the 2009-2010 fiscal year. These gifts included long term commitments made to the college through the establishment of four named endowments and the naming of the Louise L. Tuller Associate Degree Nursing program of study. In-kind gifts of equipment, supplies, pro bono and other services totaling $44,000 were also donated to the college.

For more information about how you can make a difference in our community, contact the CCCC Foundation at 1-800-682-8353, ext. 7213 or via email at foundation@cccc.edu.
